Labor of Love

They probably passed by each other on campus at Rhode Island School of Design, but they didn't actually meet until a trimester abroad in Guatemala, where they quickly became an item. Now married and living outside Seattle, on Washington's Bainbridge Island, Chelsea and James Minola have established Grain, a design studio and consultancy dedicated to social and environmental responsibility. With their first rug collection, the couple have returned to the country that brought them together, commissioning Guatemalan artisans to flat-weave locally sourced wool into three patterns including El Prado. All are available at 48 by 72 and 96 by 120 inches. graindesign.com.
